"THAT'S BILLY."

An estimable lady who presides over a household has living with her a sister and brother—the latter, "Billy," being one of those good-natured, fun-loving fellows, always up to mischief, and yet always the pet of the family. A few days ago Billy, not having much to do, remained at home the greater portion of the forenoon, Saturday, and while the ladies were hastening through their household duties, which required a little more attention than usual, owing to its being the close of the week, he amused himself by bothering them in various ways, the most annoying of which was going but quietly and ringing the door bell, thus trightening them into the belief that a visitor had called and caught them in toilet scarcely presentable. Twice did they thus answer the bell, only to find that Billy was at his tricks. After the second time they "went for him" so savagely that he promised to clear out, and taking his hat departed. Five minutes later the bell rang. "That's Billy again," ejaculated the two females in chorus, I'll fix him," continued his younger sister, and picking up a large paliful of potato parings, squash trimmings and dirty water, she slipped noiselessly out of the back door and round the side of the house to the front, where she peered round the corner of the building cautiously and saw the figure of a man standing by the side of the door, with his back toward her. Raising the pan to just the right position, she sprang around the corner and brought the contents down full upon the head of Billy, while at the same instant the other sister, who had quietly approached the door from the inside, suddenly threw it open, and with arms extended, bounded forward, exclaiming, "Now I've got you!" Before the words were fairly out of her mouth she came to a sudden stop and nearly shrieked with surprise and mortification, as a glance showed her that it wasn't "Billy" she and her sister had captured, but a middle-aged well-dressed stranger, and he stood with an expression of alarm on his countenance, caused by the singular stranger proved to be a legislator who had been desired by a mutual friend in the upper country to call and deliver a message while he was here arranging for accommodations.

A PRISONER STARVES HIMSELF TO DEATH.—On the 25th of May last Chris-topher Swartz, a half-witted German employed in the Goshen Jail as watch-man, was chocked to death in an attemped escape by a negro named Alexander Diamond and a white man named Morgan. To this attempted escape and resulting murder, another immate of the jail, Jerry Daniels, was privy. Diamond and Morgan were tried at the last term of the court, and were sentenced to ten. and Morgan were tried at the last term of the court, and were sentenced to ten years' imprisonment each. Daniels was not tried, and remained in jail. On the 14th of October Daniels refused to take either food or drink. He would give no explanation of his reasons, talking to no one, but persistently maintaining a moody silence. Two of his fellow-prisoners united with him in this plan. Their names were Jerry Lucy, from Goshen, awaiting trial for petty larceny, and John McCarthy, from Millsburg, who was serving out a four monthstime on a conviction for the same offense. All persisted in their refusal to eat or dink until they became very weak, and, on a physican certifying that longer confinement would cause death, McCarthy was released and Lucy was bailed by his feined. tifying that longer confinement would cause death, McCarthy was released and Lucy was bailed by his friends. No such luck was in store for Daniels. He still persisted in his design. Its the inquiries of the keeper whether he wanted anything, he returned surly answers, and resolutely refused all profers of sympathy and relief. In the earley part of last week a physician, who had been called, said that he must take a teaspoonful of whiskey in half a cup of milk every two hours or die. He took the mixture a few times and then closed him. He also refused to lie upon his bed, and as long as he was strongenough rolled of it to the was proflered. bed, and as long as he was strongenough rolled off it to the stone floor as often as rolled off it to the stone floor as often as the attendant placed him upon it. He refused to see a clergyman, even when told that he must die, and when Mr. Wade, the turkey, asked him if he wished to leave any message, he merely muttered an oath, and at night, when all was quiet, he filled the jail with blasphemies. For seventeen days he took no sustenance, so far as is known, with the exception of the few cups of whisksy and milk, and finally, on Thursday, October 30th, he died. His death was fearful. He was conscious to the last, and died with an unfinished curse upon his lips.—[Middletown, N. Y., Mercury.

As Obsolete Writ Applied For.—The ancient English writ known as de ventre implication was applied for in New York in the Supreme Court Chambers a few days since, before Judge Fancher. Malcolm Campbell, who represented the petitioner, Samuel S. Browning, handed in the petition, which relates that he is a grandson of Frederick Rollwagen, who died at the age of 63. Three years before his death he married Magdalem Herman, aged 45, who had never borne children. He died in October, after having suffered from paralysis. If the widow were now to have a child, the petitioner would be deprived of property which he would otherwise inherit. He asks that the Sheriff be directed to summon a jury of matrons to examine the defendant so as to prevent a fraudulent infant from being set up as hers. Mr. Arnoux in reply argued that the writ was obsolete, and there was no case of the kind on record in the United States, and that such an emergency was amply provided for by the statute which emproyers the AN OBSOLETE WRIT APPLIED FOR .- The record in the United States, and that such an emergency was samply provided for by the statute which empowers the Court to obtain a medical certificate. The Court denied the motion, and three physicians were ordered to be selected— one by the petitioner, one by the re-spondent, and a third by the Court.
